

DR. ANN PATTESON

Dr. Ann Patteson has been an arts educator at the college and university levels, most recently at the faculty of education, Queen's University, where she taught music to elementary school teacher candidates. She recently co-chaired The Arts for Social and Environmental Justice conference, bringing together diverse stakeholders to explore the role for the arts in creating compassion, understanding, capacity and action to reform educational, social and ecological landscapes. As the former director of research at The Royal Conservatory, Dr. Patteson led over 45 research studies on the effects of arts-integrated teaching and learning.